NEW OXFORDS
FOR MEN

THE PREVAILING AILMENTS

From the Health Department, A. Lewis, Commissioner.

There has recently been an unusual and written concerning pneumonia and influenza that it would seem there was nothing left to be said on the subject. Some of the theories advanced by science are conflicting, and many eminent men of the medical profession are not agreed as to prevention, transmission and treatment, and some of the means of prevention used last year, such as the mask, rigid quarantine, the closing of schools and public places have practically been thrown into the discard during the present epidemic.

There are a few sane, sensible and time-tested precautions, and preventive measures which science and the whole of the medical profession concede to be highly efficacious in the prevention of these terrible diseases, and which any individual can observe and carry out without any great inconvenience.

Therefore, as the pneumonia season is here, both individually and as an aftermath to the influenza, which also continues with us, the State Health Department wishes to reiterate with added emphasis the great importance of the above, once and putting into practice of these simple precautions and preventive measures.

Your safety and immunity to these diseases depend upon keeping yourself all times in perfect fighting trim, to the standard of physical fitness. To attain and retain this high standard of physical fitness, it would prescribe and recommend the constant observance of the following:

No cough or sneeze without the use of a handkerchief, to do so aids in the spread of the disease. Never sit on the floor as the dust spreads.

To do this will require liberal feeding, avoid undue bodily fatigue and rest.

Be optimistic, eat well, live well, have a sound and upright frame of mind, and good health for some of the best medicine.

Avoid exposure of the body to extremes of heat and cold. Keep the body clean by frequent bathing, and aiding elimination. Eat regularly of plain nutritious diet. Keep the feet warm and dry. Live out in the open air as much as possible, and always keep a plentiful supply of fresh air in the sleeping room. If you have a cold, a lingering cough, or feel below physically in any way, consult a doctor.

WATCH THE FALL PIGS

There is a general impression among most farmers that fall pigs are not profitable. This is brought about more than anything else by the fact that fall pigs must be fed during the winter months on grain, as pasture is not available during those months.

However, fall pigs have several advantages over spring pigs if properly handled and properly cared for.

A great many farmers that do raise fall pigs, often get them through the winter as cheaply as possible, then allow them to graze on pasture during the summer, and finish them out in the fall. It is doubtful whether or not this practice is a profitable method of raising fall pigs.

Fall pigs, if not properly fed during the first winter, will be stunted and not make good fattening when put on pasture in the spring. Usually the market in April and May is higher than the market during the summer months, and for that reason it is advisable under ordinary conditions to keep the fall hogs growing quite rapidly in order that they may be ready for the market not later than the middle of June.

To do this will require liberal feeding, by applying crockets on some warm day or by using a good reliable hog dip. It is well to disinfect the pens once during the winter. To prevent worms, give a mineral mixture consisting of charcoal, wood ashes, sulphur, copperas and salt.

Fall pigs well handled and well fed will go through the winter in good condition and be found just as profitable in most cases as pigs born during the month of March and April, and are demanded by the president of the Oklahoma Horsemen's Association.

State M. Peck of Oklahoma City, during the month of March and April, is president of the Association of Attorneys for the Western and Northern Horsemen's Association of Oklahoma.

BANK TELLER'S PAY OF $125 NOT ENOUGH

Judge Bob Williams Says Man Can't Be Blamed for Stealing When His Salary Won't Support Family.

Rich corporations who fail to pay their employees a wage upon which they can live honorably, encourage young men to steal. When a bank teller with a wife and three children is paid $125 a month, how long can he expect him to live without stealing? When this young man is sentenced, I am going to see that the term is short." This was the statement of Judge R. L. Williams Monday at Muskogee when Thomas Arthur Fulken, former teller of the First National Bank of Bartlesville, entered a plea of guilty to embezzlement of $7,000 of the bank's funds over a term of four years. Fulken said that he had repaid all the money except $400. When questioned by the court, he said his salary as teller was $125 a month. He will be sentenced at McAlester in June.
